

Borders

Borders are a great way to dress up a photograph or a nice verse. I like to work a design “as I go” which can be a little tricky. With a rectangular border, I start at the corners, decide on the corner design and then start to work my way in toward the center, if there is a little “extra” space in the center it can easily be filled in with the right size quill.

I especially like border designs around oval openings. For ovals, I often use the open C-Scroll around the opening and then mark the top and bottom and then the opposite sides and those are my starting point for the design. Once I have the top, bottom and sides figured out I start filling in the rest, making sure I use the same number of shapes for all four “curves”
